play and, in 1984, the Evening Standard of London award for "Master Harold" . . . and the Boys. Widely considered Fugard's best and most autobiographical play, "Master Harold" centers on the relationship of two black waiters, Sam and Willy, to Hally ("Master Harold"), a white teenager embittered by the neglect of his alcoholic, racist father.

The racial prejudice we find within the drama of Master Harold and the boys is quite evident by both the title of the play and the dialogue contained inside the story. However, the play of Fences although it takes place in a time period of racial prejudice is not about racism directly, instead the story deals with a man's decisions that have tragic results.
